AFR STATEMENT ON UBS LIBOR PRICE FIXING

Americans for Financial Reform issued this statement today, December 21, 2012:

The revelations of brazen criminal behavior and blatant conspiracies by major banks continue to roll in. The latest involve the Swiss bank UBS and the LIBOR price-fixing. LIBOR is a central interest rate for the global economy and a critical input to everything from consumer lending rates to foreign exchange transactions to customized swaps used by municipalities. UBS traders conspired with other financial market participants to rig the LIBOR rate to increase profits and take advantage of bank customers and counterparties.

These actions run far too deep and are much too extensive to be written off as the behavior of a few 'rogue traders'. In case after case – ranging from the mispricing of 'toxic assets' prior to the financial crisis to huge proprietary trading losses to rigging the LIBOR – we have seen evidence of a bank profit model based on systematic deception and corruption.

Given the clear willingness of financial institutions to evade the rules and break the law, regulators must move away from reliance on bank self-regulation. We need clear, tough rules that impose sensible rules of the road and require responsible bank behavior toward customers; and we need those rules to be effectively enforced. One way for regulators to show that they have learned this lesson is in how they draft Dodd Frank rules. In too many cases thus far - on issues ranging from capital rules to fiduciary protections for municipalities dealing with large financial entities - regulators have remained willing to outsource their job to the banks and to weaken and undermine rules that protect customers from exploitation. After the staggering costs of the financial crisis, no one should need another reminder of the need for change, but we certainly have one in these LIBOR revelations.
