Dear Representative,

On behalf of Americans for Financial Reform (AFR), we urge you to reject any effort to repeal Title II of the Dodd-Frank Act, which establishes an orderly liquidation authority for large financial institutions.<sup>1</sup>

Orderly liquidation authority is a crucial backstop designed to ensure that systemically important financial institutions can never again hold up the public for bailouts. During the financial crisis of 2008, policymakers of both parties bailed out big banks because they claimed not to have the legal authority to restructure failed financial institutions. Title II takes away this excuse by providing a clear process for dealing with failed mega-banks. Repealing Title II amounts to going back to the era of too big to fail.

Title II of the Dodd-Frank Act established a receivership process for failing systemically important financial institutions. This receivership process is modeled after the long-successful FDIC receivership process for failed banks. It is designed not only to liquidate a failing financial institution with minimal economic disruption, but also to ensure accountability for executives of the failed institution.

If Title II were repealed, regulators during a financial crisis would again be tempted to bail out failed megabanks and insurance companies as they did in 2008. A conventional bankruptcy is the first choice under Dodd-Frank, and regulators are properly required to prepare large banks for a conventional bankruptcy path, but Title II is a crucial emergency backstop that grants clear legal authority for receivership and liquidation of any failing systemically important financial institution, bank or non-bank.

The Congressional Budget Office does score a ten year savings of approximately $20 billion from Title II repeal. This is because they estimate that some of the potential losses from the Orderly Liquidation Fund created in Title II may not be paid back within the budget window.

During the debate over Dodd-Frank, AFR and others strongly supported pre-funding of the Orderly Liquidation Fund through a tax on large systemically significant financial institutions. Such pre-funding would eliminate any budgetary costs due to Title II. We continue to strongly support it.

Should Congress wish to reduce the budgetary costs of Title II, then it should amend Dodd-Frank to require pre-funding of liquidity support during a resolution. But even in the absence of pre-funding it would be extremely foolhardy to entirely eliminate Title II, as this part of Dodd-Frank provides the only clear legal authority for Federal regulators to conduct an orderly liquidation and restructuring of a large bank holding company or systemically important non-bank. Entirely eliminating the crucial Title II authority would only open the door to future bailouts. We urge you to reject any legislation that does so.

Thank you for your consideration. For more information please contact AFR's Policy Director, Marcus Stanley at marcus@ourfinancialsecurity.org or 202-466-3672.

Sincerely,

Americans for Financial Reform
