Dear Senator,

On behalf of Americans for Financial Reform<sup>1</sup>, we are writing to express our opposition to the variety of amendments proposed to the pending 2014 budget resolution that would impose virtually insurmountable procedural hurdles that underfunded financial regulators must satisfy before putting in place additional oversight over Wall Street financial companies. Among these amendments are #145 (Collins), #164 (Ayotte), #174 (Inhofe), #175 (Inhofe), #215 (Blunt), #340 (Shelby), #367 (Risch), #376 (Paul), #459 (Collins), #462 (Johanns), #463 (Johanns), #465 (Johanns), #472 (Cruz), and #571 (Ayotte.) By adding yet more layers of cost-benefit analysis for financial rules, these amendments could indefinitely delay the process of creating adequate oversight of our financial system.

According to recent polling data, over 70 percent of Americans favor stronger oversight and tougher rules for big Wall Street banks and the financial services industry. This is not surprising, given the estimates that the financial crisis cost the economy as much as $13 trillion and resulted in massive job losses and household savings. It is evident that the costs and risks of failing to act on financial reforms necessary to prevent another financial crisis are overwhelming.

The kind of burdensome and time-consuming cost-benefit analysis procedures called for in these amendments is not about improving analysis, it is about introducing additional roadblocks to meaningful change and more opportunities for Wall Street to engage in litigation and block reform.

Financial agencies are already statutorily required to analyze and consider the economic costs and benefits of their regulations, and they do so. They must also consider comments from business and the public. In the nearly three years since the passage of the Dodd-Frank Act, the financial regulatory agencies have considered tens of thousands of public comments and held thousands of meetings and round tables. They have been subjected to multiple industry lawsuits on the basis of their existing statutory economic analysis requirements. Today, just one-third of the rulemaking mandated under Dodd-Frank has been finalized. Financial oversight agencies have pointed to unrealistic cost-benefit analysis standards already in place as one major reason for the delay.

<sup>1</sup>Americans for Financial Reform is an unprecedented coalition of more than 250 national, state and local groups who have come together to reform the financial industry. Members of our coalition include consumer, civil rights, investor, retiree, community, labor, religious and business groups.

The public wants and deserves real change in our financial system to protect us from the risk of another disastrous financial collapse, and to ensure that consumers and investors are not subject to abusive, deceptive, and fraudulent practices by the big banks. Don't vote to prevent and delay this needed reform. Oppose amendments intended to add new and burdensome layers of cost-benefit analysis or create other barriers to needed agency action, such as #145 (Collins), #164 (Ayotte), #174 (Inhofe), #175 (Inhofe), #215 (Blunt), #340 (Shelby), #367 (Risch), #376 (Paul), #459 (Collins), #462 (Johanns), #463 (Johanns), #465 (Johanns), #472 (Cruz), and #571 (Ayotte) and any other similar amendments.

Thank you for your consideration. For more information please contact AFR's Policy Director, Marcus Stanley at marcus@ourfinancialsecurity.org or 202-466-3672.

Sincerely,

Americans for Financial Reform
