Dear Representative,

On behalf of Americans for Financial Reform, we are writing to express our opposition to HR 1062, the “SEC Regulatory Accountability Act”.¹ This legislation would imperil the implementation of many important financial regulatory rules by adding numerous unnecessary procedural requirements to rulemakings by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC).

The SEC is already required to conduct economic analysis on every rule it passes, and to examine the effect of its rulemakings on capital formation, market efficiency, and competition. This legislation would add a lengthy list of additional cost-benefit requirements to these existing requirements. The new requirements in HR 1062 include a requirement to separately analyze the costs and benefits of the entire set of “available regulatory alternatives” in addition to the costs and benefits of the actual rule being considered. Since this set of alternatives may contain numerous possibilities, this requirement alone could add dozens of analyses prior to any new rulemaking. Even beyond this massive new requirement, the legislation also specifies a long list of additional analyses to be performed in connection with any new rulemaking, including analyses of the effect of new rules on market liquidity, investor choice, state and local governments, and other entities.

The requirements in this bill would force the agency to measure costs and benefits of a new rule before that rule was even implemented or market data resulting from the rule was available. They also include enormously broad and vague mandates such as determining whether a regulation imposes the ‘least burden possible’ among all possible regulatory options. A court could overturn the SEC’s decision in any case where it found any one of the numerous analyses required here to be inadequate. The vagueness of mandates like the ‘least burden possible’ means that court challenges or court decisions could rest on claims that are essentially speculative and theoretical. These new mandates would not improve the quality of the regulatory process; they would stop it in its tracks.

The lengthy list of new requirements in this bill is transparently intended to create roadblocks in the way of passing any investor protection rule. The effect would be to halt the process of implementing rules under the Dodd-Frank Act – and potentially also rulemakings under more recent laws such as the JOBS Act. Indeed, HR 1062 would put significant pressure on the SEC to disregard congressional mandates by making the agency evaluate the need for regulations that

Congress has unequivocally directed the SEC to write. Further, the numerous additional procedural and analytical requirements imposed by this bill come with no additional funding for the SEC. Asking the SEC to do so much more without additional resources would make the current regulatory delays at the SEC -- evidenced by the numerous congressionally mandated deadlines it has missed -- even worse.

Reforms that create accountability and transparency for Wall Street are crucial to the well-being of our financial markets and to the protection of investors and market participants. But they will also change a very profitable status quo that earns a small group of Wall Street banks many billions of dollars each year. Financial industry special interests have every interest in blocking change. This legislation is a toolbox that would allow them to use legal challenges to do so indefinitely.

According to polling data, over 70 percent of Americans favor stronger rules and enforcement for big Wall Street banks and the financial services industry.² A large majority also favor the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform Act. In the face of the public's demand for change, Congress must reject legislation such as HR 1062, which, regardless of its intentions, would hamper effective oversight of our financial markets.

Thank you for your consideration. For more information please contact AFR's Policy Director, Marcus Stanley at marcus@ourfinancialsecurity.org or 202-466-3672.

Sincerely,

Americans for Financial Reform
