Dear Representative,

We write to urge you to support HR 2788, Mortgage Forgiveness Tax Relief Act, HR 2944, Mortgage Forgiveness Tax Relief Act of 2013.

Extending the qualified principal residence indebtedness exclusion (QPRI) is of critical importance as we work to resolve the housing crisis. More than six years after the mortgage market imploded, we have still not returned to pre-2008 foreclosure levels. In the next year, many more homeowners will receive loan modifications with principal reduction under HAMP, the National Mortgage Settlement, or through private, proprietary modifications. The recent settlement with JP Morgan Chase, which requires a minimum of $1.5 billion in principal reductions, further ups the ante. Homeowners who need a principal reduction on their mortgage in order to avoid foreclosure should not face a tax bill. The imposition of tax in these circumstances undermines national housing policy.

The extension of QPRI will allow many homeowners to remain in their homes, paying on their mortgages, restoring some small measure of financial stability to their lives and to their communities. Extension of QPRI has received uncommonly wide bipartisan support across the entire spectrum of stakeholders.

We would ask that you go further, as well. QPRI has never reached the majority of homeowners who need principal reductions because QPRI is, as a practical matter, only available to homeowners receiving reductions on their purchase money mortgage. Homeowners who refinanced and received cash-out, or who paid off medical bills or student loans, or who took out a home equity loan to address deferred maintenance on their homes, cannot use QPRI to avoid paying income tax, even though they will have no additional income with which to pay the increased taxes and even if they remain deeply underwater after the loan modification. For example, under the terms of a recent principal reduction modification offered a Connecticut homeowner, the homeowner would, after the modification, owe nearly $250,000 more than the house is worth and face an increase in their annual taxes of over $10,000 a year, for three years, on a total annual income of only $71,000. In order to protect homeowners who need principal reductions from adverse tax consequences and to promote tax equity, QPRI should be expanded to include all residential mortgage debt forgiven due to a decrease in the value of the home or the homeowner's financial condition.

The Mortgage Debt Forgiveness Tax Relief Act expires on December 31, 2013. Principal reduction modifications entered into after this date, including those authorized by the recent settlement with JP Morgan Chase, will result in additional tax consequences for homeowners. Without an extension, far fewer modifications will be done and the modifications done will be less sustainable, with wide-reaching consequences for homeowners, the communities they live in, and our national economy. The settlements with some of the large financial institutions which are finally providing modifications with principal reductions for qualified homeowners should not end up penalizing the homeowners who have waited so long for assistance.

An extension of the Mortgage Debt Forgiveness Tax Relief Act cannot wait for a more global tax reform bill; it should be enacted swiftly.

Sincerely,
