SUPPORT MOORE AMENDMENT #2 AND WATERS AMENDMENT #9 TO HR 4113; OPPOSE HR 4113

The ‘cost-benefit’ provisions of HR 4113 would do serious damage to the ability of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) to perform its vital function of safeguarding our derivatives markets to prevent manipulation of commodity prices and lower the risk of another disastrous financial collapse. Section 203 of HR 4113 imposes a host of new ‘cost-benefit’ requirements on the CFTC – and just as important, allows Wall Street opponents of CFTC oversight to challenge regulations in court based on the claim that any one of these numerous required analyses is somehow inadequate. This amounts to a road map for big banks to delay or overturn needed regulation of our derivatives markets.

MOORE AMENDMENT #2 would strike the new cost-benefit provisions in Section 203 from HR 4113. The amendment also expresses the sense of the Congress that the CFTC is already required to consider the costs and benefits of all its regulations in light of the efficiency, competitiveness, and financial integrity of futures markets, the protection of market participants and the public, effective price discovery, sound risk management practices, and other public considerations. Furthermore, the amendment points out that the courts already hold the CFTC accountable for following the law and for not acting in an arbitrary and capricious manner.

WATERS AMENDMENT #9 retains the new cost-benefit provisions in Section 203, but aligns these provisions with the President’s executive order on cost benefit analysis by specifying that these analytic requirements are not subject to judicial review. This removes the ability of the Wall Street banks regulated by the CFTC to use extensive cost-benefit requirements to delay and block needed agency action by taking advantage of the inherently uncertain nature of cost-benefit analyses to mount endless legal challenges to regulations. While cost-benefit requirements would remain in place, they would serve as guidance to the agency’s expert staff regarding rulemaking, rather than a mechanism for industry to overturn rules by appealing technical analyses to courts that lack the expertise of the agency.

The DEL BENE AMENDMENT, on the other hand, would not be effective in preventing the harmful effects of the cost benefit analysis provisions in Section 203 . It leaves in place the extensive new cost benefit analysis requirements in Section 203 and would also continue to allow these requirements to be used as the basis for Wall Street lawsuits. The amendment does add a rephrased standard of judicial review in which the court holds the CFTC to an ‘abuse of discretion’ standard rather the current ‘arbitrary and capricious’ standard. It is likely that there will be little practical difference between these two standards. The ‘abuse of discretion’ standard has not been previously used in the regulatory rulemaking context, but there is no reason to believe that courts would interpret it as stronger than the current standard of deference. Thus, this change to the bill does not address the serious problems created by the cost benefit provisions in section 203.

AFR also urges members to oppose HR 4113 even if the Moore and or Waters amendments pass because of our grave concerns about other aspects of the legislation.
