Q2 There is a bill in the U.S. Senate that would scale back the law Congress passed after the 2008 financial crisis to tighten the oversight of big banks. Supporters of the bill say Congress went too far in regulating the financial services industry and that regulations have become a burden to lending and job creation. Opponents of the bill say that big banks and finance companies require tough oversight so that we can avoid another financial crisis and protect consumers from ripoffs by unscrupulous companies. Who do you agree with more?

Agree more with supporters of this bill who say Congress went too far in regulating the financial services industry after the crisis and that regulations have become a burden to lending and job creation 25%
Agree more with opponents of this bill who say that big banks and finance companies require tough oversight so that we can avoid another financial crisis and protect consumers from rip offs by unscrupulous companies 64%

Q3 The sponsors of the bill pending in the Senate say it will reduce the regulation of community banks. But it would roll back regulations on some of the largest banks in the country, ones that have assets of between $50 billion and $250 billion. Some of the banks they want to deregulate include institutions like SunTrust and American Express. Do you support or oppose loosening regulations on banks with between $50 billion and $250 billion in assets?
