Dear Representative,

On behalf of Americans for Financial Reform and other undersigned organizations, we urge you to oppose the amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 2672, “the CFPB Rural Designation Petition and Correction Act.” This amendment, offered by Rep. Barr of Kentucky and also cited as the “Helping Expand Lending Practices in Rural Communities Act,” would change the 2010 Dodd-Frank Act by adding a section which would give individuals the ability to apply for rural designation for purposes of federal consumer financial protection law. HR 2672 is scheduled for committee markup on Thursday, March 13.

If adopted, this amendment would effectively create a petition process that would allow individuals who reside or do business in a state to apply for the designation of an area as rural (an area that has not already been designated as such). Areas designated as rural would be able to circumvent certain mortgage provisions put in place by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB). Recently, the CFPB enacted the Qualified Mortgage (QM) standard to provide lenders with an incentive to originate loans that are restricted from having the kind of risky product features that contributed to the housing and financial crises. This reform, along with CFPB’s Ability to Repay provision, will help to curb the incentives lenders had in pre-crisis years to put borrowers into mortgages they could not afford. The QM and the Ability to Repay standards help the mortgage lending marketplace better serve borrowers and also bring stability to the overall industry.

The CFPB mortgage rules contain certain provisions related to loans made by creditors who operate in what are designated as “rural or underserved counties.” The final rules, for example, postpone certain restrictions on balloon payment qualified mortgages for small creditors in these areas. Balloon payment loans are loans which do not fully amortize over the term of the note, thus leaving a “balloon payment,” or a large amount due, at the end of the mortgage. The CFPB adopted an amendment in May 2013 which created a two-year transition period (ending in January 2016) that allows certain creditors to make balloon payment qualified mortgages even if they do not operate predominately in rural or underserved areas. During this transition period, which has just begun, the CFPB will be assessing whether the definitions of rural and underserved should be modified for mortgage lending purposes.

The CFPB has already demonstrated its commitment to using the two year transition period to look into the definition of “rural and underserved” as it applies in mortgage lending. This is a decision which should be kept with the regulators, and Congress should give the CFPB time to consider the matter before stepping in to change the process. The CFPB has two years to work on the modification of the rural definition before regulatory requirements change; if Congress wants to consider action, it should do so after the CFPB has had the chance to study the issue and make a considered decision on how to proceed.

Thank you for your consideration of our views.

Sincerely,
