Dear Representative:

On behalf of Americans for Financial Reform, we are writing to express our opposition to two amendments being offered to the Financial Services and General Government Appropriations bill.

The first would bar the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) from issuing any rule or regulation related to payday lending until it has completed at least four new and unnecessary studies and reporting requirements. This amendment would delay the CFPB from completing a rulemaking process that has been underway for more than two years and has included extensive outreach to industry groups and other stakeholders. The agency has already issued two comprehensive reports on the harm caused by the debt trap of back-to-back loans made without any consideration of a borrower's ability to repay and held numerous field hearings to better understand how consumers are impacted by common abusive practices and the shortcomings of existing state consumer protections.

Payday loans are costing consumers billions of dollars per year in excessive fees—frequently resulting in overdraft fees, involuntary account closure, and even bankruptcy. The reports required by the amendment would provide no new information that has not already been released or is not required as part of the formal rulemaking process. The CFPB must have the ability to move forward without delay and use the authority that Congress gave it in the Dodd-Frank Act to protect consumers and prevent abusive practices.

The second amendment would similarly delay and obstruct CFPB efforts to write a rule to eliminate forced arbitration in consumer financial contracts, action that the Dodd-Frank Act authorizes the Bureau to take. Forced arbitration clauses in financial services contracts, most of which also restrict consumers' participation in class actions, result in the funneling of consumer disputes into a secret system controlled by Wall Street banks and other lenders. Because forced arbitration is in take-it-or-leave-it contracts, individuals have little or no choice when applying for student loans, credit cards, auto financing, payday loans and other financial services.

After three years studying the issue of forced arbitration, the CFPB released a 728-page evidence-based, data-driven study required by section 1028(a) of the Dodd-Frank Act. This amendment would require an unnecessary repeat of the CFPB's work. It would block the agency from moving forward to fulfill its mission to protect millions of consumers harmed by abusive practices in this area. In May, 58 members of Congress sent a letter to the CFPB urging the agency to “move forward quickly on a rulemaking on arbitration (see letter dated May 21, 2015).

We urge you to reject these amendments, both of which would unduly interfere with the CFPB’s authority to restore consumers’ rights. Thank you for your consideration. For more information, please contact Becky Thiess at thiess@ourfinancialsecurity.org or 202-973-8005.

Sincerely,

Americans for Financial Reform
