The Honorable Barack Obama
President of the United States
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue
Washington, DC 20500

We are writing regarding the upcoming vacancies at the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). We believe that it is of utmost importance that you nominate candidates with a strong and demonstrated commitment to protecting investors and to moving ahead with needed reforms in our financial markets.

The SEC is the lead agency regulating the capital markets. The decisions SEC commissioners make are of crucial importance both for ordinary investors and for the stability of our financial system. The global financial crisis was the largest of a seemingly unending string of scandals and crises that have impacted capital markets over the last 15 years. Failures in SEC oversight have played a central role in far too many of these events. They have harmed investor well-being and shaken investor confidence in our securities markets.

Too often, nominees to serve on the SEC have been ‘revolving door’ insiders with a history of moving back and forth between Wall Street firms seeking to escape accountability and the agency charged with defending the public interest. At best, the revolving door creates a situation where key commissioners must repeatedly recuse themselves from critical enforcement or rulemaking decisions, which is highly problematic. At worst, it leads to decisions that are systemically biased toward the interests of financial industry insiders and away from the public and investor interest. We need a dramatic change in approach as compared to the pre-crisis SEC. But we have not seen such a change.

The passage of the Dodd-Frank Act placed major new demands on the SEC, including extensive new mandates to address systemic risk issues, many requiring a new level of coordination with other regulators. Five years after the passage of the law, the SEC has failed to complete many required Dodd-Frank rules. Indeed, it has just announced another set of delays of important rules, and coordination with other agencies to address systemic risk issues has often appeared to be inadequate. The SEC has also lagged behind in its essential role of investor protection. Important rules are stalled or delayed even in areas where there is widespread agreement on the need for action, such as the modernization of regulation for investment professionals, investment products, and market structure.

The failure to provide effective and aggressive oversight of our financial markets has created disastrous costs for the American economy and the American people. We need SEC commissioners who will contribute actively to changing this. Many voices speak regularly and loudly on behalf of the financial services industry before the agency. Any nomination for Commissioner must provide a voice that is genuinely independent of these industry interests and has a record of clear commitment to the public interest and to the protection of ordinary investors.

Your choices to fill leadership roles at the SEC, as at other key financial regulatory agencies, have a tremendous impact on the economic lives of all Americans and on your Administration's economic legacy. We urge you to nominate people who are not rotating through the revolving door, and who will help the agency to be a tough and effective rule writer and watchdog to promote the safety, fairness and transparency of the capital markets.

Sincerely,
